Creating an Insurance Industry that is made for Millennials

According to a Morgan Stanley report, India has one of the largest population of Millennials (those born between 1981 to 1994) in the world, which is also approximately one-third of the total Indian population. It is even estimated that Millennials form approximately 45% of the total work population, and contribute 70% to the country's household income. However, their spend on insurance, which is a necessity, has been meagre.

Millennials are considered to be swift, agile, digitally inclined, and they expect prompt, convenient, and personalized services. They prefer authentic and paperless transactions that are customer centric. Hence in order to tap this large customer base effectively, insurers will have to concentrate on what is pertinent to them.

However, it will be erroneous to state that insurance companies in India have not taken any step in that direction. In order to attract the younger buyers, companies have started providing digital services to the customers- from providing policy information, to premium payment via digital methods. More so, while fighting the current pandemic situation and following the social distancing norms, the insurance industry has taken several steps to respond and be digitally accessible to its customers, even if it was reluctant to do so earlier. This is because digital transactions have become a survival necessity for the insurance companies now.

At the same time, the Regulator, IRDAI has also laid out several relaxations as well as guidelines for the insurers to follow in the given situation. E.g. IRDAI has recently approved “Video Based Identification Process (VBIP)” in order to simplify the process of Know-Your-Customer (KYC) and make it customer friendly. VBIP is “an alternative electronic process of KYC in paperless form, carried out by the insurer by undertaking seamless, secure, real-time, consent based audio-visual interaction with the customer to obtain identification information including the necessary KYC documents required for the purpose of client due diligence and to ascertain the veracity of the information furnished by the customer” (www.irdai.gov.in).

As insurers increase their ‘direct to customer approach’ by going digital, trust building and smooth conduct of transactions will be of utmost importance. Therefore offering and customizing products as per the needs of Millennials, creating engagement solutions that offer effectual service, and prioritizing technological revolutions while being customer centric will help in a great way to attract and build better connect with this powerful customer group and prompt them to buy insurance.

Falling persistency levels in life insurance are a challenge

Insurers in India are facing low persistency levels, especially in market-linked and endowment products, due to the current economic crisis and concerns about job losses and salary cuts arising from the pandemic.

CARE Ratings associate director Saurabh Bhalerao told, “Historically, in the pre-COVID times, there has been an uptick in the persistency levels for life insurance companies. But the pandemic has led to a new set of challenges for many customers. While it has created much more awareness about insurance and led to higher demand for term plans and protection products, persistency ratios will remain under pressure, especially for products that are market linked.”

Data analytics can make insurance firms smarter

To meet customer needs, most insurers have already started to collect a wealth of data. However, they have been slow in monetizing this asset. To understand and meet consumer needs, there is an immediate need to create new business lines or models to capture the value of data and analytics. As more and more insurance consumers shift online to interact, compare products and prices, and make purchases, the volume of available data is increasing exponentially.
